Minister

How can you in good conscience leave the date for community feedback as is ,when accepting that your document for public consideration is unnavigatable and filled with inconsistencies . I have hEard it described as raw data still in need of much work. If your intention is to subvert any possibilty of public discourse ( a key to democratic process) you must be v pleased with yourself . If not I hope you are having sleepless nights and attacks of shame as you move to rectify this mess.

I sat with a senior academic and we gave up - we are not stupid in fact we are highly educated . The process was totally depressing.

No wonder politicians are held in low regard and many young are disenchantd and cynical ,

Show your moral fibre . This cannot be allowed to progress without informed public input.
