Please tell us your thoughts:	The Adelaide city parklands are a jewel amongst all Australian cities. Yet they are being nibbled away. In the suburbs, it seems expeditious for builders to clear every tree so that it is easier and more profitable for them to build. Yet we agree that more heat results when there are fewer trees and therefore we use more energy. There is also more noise generated in denuded environments. In addition, a great deal of glass facing into the sun, plus dark walls, fences, pavers, roofs, compound heat absorption. Residential land use for other purposes. Will children be safe to have fun in minuscule gardens wedged between business that bring traffic and strangers?
