I am really concerned that developers will use the clause where by they don't have to let the neighbourhood have a say if it fits in the 'general zones'. For example main streets in villages like Port Elliot do not need their street scape altered permanently for greed. We need to consider the street scape in it's entirety and the heritage legacy we leave behind. You just have to look at the out of place architecture in Middleton's main street approved by an independent panel - clearly no understanding of the village or environs. I am concerned the triggers from an electronic application won't go off and buildings right on the edge of the zone will be approved without aesthetic consideration.
