Particularly in the inner urban areas, we are at grave risk of losing our distinctive character as a city. So many durable and serviceable older buildings are being demolished simply because of the inflated value of the land on which they are located. Mature trees are then legally removed to make way for huge, characterless new homes whose only charm is their views of the remaining stock of older homes, their gardens and trees. When will it become that our historic conservation zones will be like zoos displaying the last examples of threatened species?
